By ETHEL HUESTON

Swedey

Swedey is Mrs. Hueston's most mature, most assured, most important novel.

Keeping her old sense of buoyant fun and sentiment, which has endeared her to her multitude of readers, she goes deeper here into the mystery of human hearts.

In the title character she creates a remarkable woman, poignantly real.

All the World Watches the Artists and Musicians!

Mad Marriage

By George Gibbs

When a novel about musicians and "constant" nymphs comes along—it sweeps the country. In "Mad Marriage" you find a novel of the artist's world that displays with powerful effect the romantic, colorful life of a painter today. Peter Randle, the painter, possesses an extraordinary charm: he is, in truth his own worst enemy. Two women enter his life: the one a selfish, unworthy girl who traffics on his kindness; the other a wealthy, beautiful girl, who is willing to devote her life to him. George Gibbs is as well-known as a painter as he is as a novelist and he has been able to depict the life of artists today in a singularly authentic and fascinating way in "Mad Marriage." It is a novel of tremendous appeal because of wayward, irresponsible, lovable Peter Randle—the artist of today.

Oz Book*

All of the most popular of the famous Oz characters are in The Lost King of Oz, with some very up-to-date new comers including a moving-picture dummy, who is brought to life by Princess Dorothy and who figures in some very amusing episodes. The annual Oz Book is always childhood's big book event of the year.

Ruth Plumly Thompson,
Royal Historian of Oz, says:

"Discovered more than twenty years ago by L. Frank Baum, The Land of Oz is a truly American Fairyland, with a geography as real as our own and a population characteristically and whimsically American. The Scarecrow, The Patchwork Girl and The Tin Woodman are distinctly American fairies, to name only a few of the inimitable creations of Mr. Baum.

"I have always believed in fairies and in OZ. To one who does, delightful things are bound to happen. And one of the very delightfulest happened to me several years ago when the publishers of the Famous Oz Books handed me the key to that wonderful Kingdom and said: 'Will you record for us and the boys and girls the future history of Oz?'"

There are eighteen of the Famous Oz Books now, each a merry milestone on the long road of childhood, each a complete and interesting story for boy and girls from five to fifteen, as their letters testify.

A Popular $1.00 Edition of

For the first time, a popular ($1.00) edition of Mr. Baum's famous sequel to "The Wizard of Oz," featuring The Scarecrow and The Tin Woodman in amusing adventures in the Fairyland of Oz. Profusely illustrated, with picture jacket, cover and frontispiece in colors and nearly 300 pages of story. Retail price $1.00.

The Skee-zix Books Are Winners!

More Than 50,000 of the first title Sold in 1924

Here's another brand new funny book about Skee-zix, the famous little boy of "Gasoline Alley," and his beloved dog Pal. Frank King, who wrote the story of Skee-zix and Pal and drew the amusing illustrations, knows and understands boys and dogs and has made a book that will delight and entertain little folks and big ones, too.

The first Skee-zix book was Skee-zix and Uncle Walt. It tells the story of Skee-zix from the day he was left a foundling on Uncle Walt's doorstep, through babyhood and mischief days and is as human and laughable and lovable as a book can be.

The Skee-zix Books are printed in colors throughout.

THE MISTY FLATS

By

HELEN WOODBURY

Our best outside reader said of this first novel: "I do hope you'll take it, because I think it's a 'find'." The next to read it, and the next, agreed. It is the only first novel on our autumn list, and will have liberal advertising. We describe it as the sympathetic story of a young and eager American girl whose individuality was suppressed to satisfy her mother's selfishness. And we feel about it as we have about eight or ten first novels we have published in the last five years—"Trodden Gold", "High Fires" and "Feet of Clay" are examples—that it's worth exploiting and will sell well over 10,000 copies. It has not appeared serially.

Down-and-out and discouraged, Alan Beckwith sought out Andrew North, king of the underworld, and discussed a way out of his difficulties. "I will insure your life for $100,000," said North. "Immediately the policy is issued I will give you $20,000 in cash. You may enjoy life in your own way for thirteen months, and then commit suicide."

Thirteen months to live—and then suicide! Out of Alan Beckwith's desperate pact with death and the resultant happenings, Mr. Cohen has built a novel of suspense that is a real "thriller." We defy anybody to read the first chapter and omit the last.

Portland Oregonian: "As a text book of principles of home decoration and a handbook of methods for working them out, this work is unsurpassed."

Chicago Evening Post: "To those who are seeking a guide to making their homes more beautiful as well as individual, and who have a limited budget for that purpose, Mr. Crane's book offers valuable and practical suggestions as to what is suitable and therefore beautiful."

Kansas City Star: "A Practical and authoritative guide for the amateur home decorator."

The Des Moines Capital: "Ross Crane is an authority on the subject of home decoration, every phase of which is given careful consideration in this book."

Salt Lake Telegram: "It is clear and concise in its treatment of difficult problems encountered in interior decoration and is bound to be of distinct service to those who are endeavoring to fit in with the current desire for better and more beautiful surroundings."

Buffalo Courier: "One of the foremost authorities in the country on proper and harmonious home furnishing and decoration of interiors. In following the rules set down in his new book, no one can go wrong."

Atlanta Constitution: "The first instruction given by Ross Crane is to 'dream your picture.'"

The Grand Rapids Press: "Nothing better could be said for this text by Ross Crane than that it completely lives up to its heralding as a practical, authoritative and sympathetic guide for the home maker and decorator."

Pittsburgh Press: "The book is well illustrated."

Syracuse Herald: "It is a large book and no detail of the subject has been neglected. It is beautifully illustrated in color pictures, halftones and drawings."

This Big Money Maker

Readmore Lending Library Brings in Over $50 the First Month

For E. R. ALLABAND,

2035 Rhode Island Avenue, Washington, D. C.

I think that a good number of newsdealers will be interested in knowing just how the Readmore Lending Library has taken with my customers.

I put the rack on the floor of my store on late Saturday afternoon, March 28th, with its complete equipment which included 100 books, and without any advertising of any kind, I put out thirty-five books by closing time Sunday evening.

Since that time I have had to purchase about thirty-five more books to keep my rack looking at least two-thirds full. April 11th, I had seventy books on rental.

There is one thing that certainly stands out in the Readmore Lending Library as compared with the old commission library, and that is that the borrowers do not keep the books out but a day or so, and thereby giving you a bigger and, of course, a more profitable turnover.

At the rate the books are going now, it will only be a short time when I will have to have at least 200 books to keep a good number of them in the rack, as an empty rack is not inviting to a customer. My News Company gave many kind suggestions pertaining to the installing and successful operation of the Readmore Lending Library.

At the time I am writing this, May 5th, my rentals up to date have amounted to $46.94, with 65 books out, making a total of at least $53.44 business since opening.

Charles A. Scott, Sheldon, Iowa, Druggist, Says

The Readmore Lending Library is going fine. I think we have enough books for the present. We have regular customers who keep on taking books. We send out as many 75c. books as $2.00 ones. We charge 3c. a day straight, with a minimum charge of 15c. We have had books out two to twenty days, some finally buying the book. Yours very truly,

CHARLES A. SCOTT.

Nine Steady Customers by Nine O'Clock

The Rippel Art Shop, at 356 Market Street, Sunbury, Pa., was one of the very first to install the complete Readmore Lending Library outfit, right after it appeared in the November, 1924, issue of THE AMERICAN NEWS TRADE JOURNAL. The following is his experience as he wrote it:

"We received the Readmore Lending Library together with the first shipment of books late on a Saturday afternoon," says Mr. Rippel, "and it wasn't until 6:30 that same afternoon that we were able to unpack them and place the rack at the front of our store. By nine o'clock that evening we had nine customers who took books home with them. We are certainly delighted with the prospects of this library and have no doubt that in a short time it is going to be one of the best sources of income for our store. I cannot see why anyone would hesitate in placing this money maker in his store."

From the "Saturday Review of Books"

"The Bookman's Glossary," by John A. Holden, is a hand-book that every printer, librarian and collector, who desires to be well informed or who needs this information, should own and keep easily accessible. It is an octavo, containing 127 pages, well printed and substantially bound and is intended for those interested in any branch of book production, distribution, collecting, or selling. It is a compendium of information, a glossary of bookish terms used in the several industries allied with book publishing; paper making, printing, binding, illustrating, and cataloging, much of which would be difficult to find elsewhere, and it brings a great deal of material into compact space that has heretofore been widely scattered through various works of reference. Mr. Holden's definitions are concise, clear, and comprehensive, and one will be surprised to see how thoroughly his book covers its field. A well-known cataloger of this city in a letter says: "I keep the useful volume within hand's reach and find frequent use for it. I have read it from beginning to end and find it admirably comprehensive and well done. You should tell the young collectors and catalogers about it for it will be invaluable to them." These are the words of a well informed bookman. In the course of a year scores of letters are sent to this department containing questions that this book is planned to answer. To this class of readers we would say by all means add "The Bookman's Glossary" to your shelf of books about books, for it will help you to a clearer and more accurate knowledge of bookish words and terms that will give you great satisfaction to understand. Mr. Holden has given us a reference that will be widely useful and many will be grateful to him for making it.

The Making and Judging of Books

By Porter Garnett

Master of The Laboratory Press, Carnegie Institute of Technology

EVERYONE who is in any way concerned with the physical aspects of books, everyone who, while maintaining a professional relationship with books, has also an amateur interest in them—the bookseller, the librarian, and the printer—is aware of the quite extraordinary revival of interest in good book-making that is taking place in America at the present time. It is perhaps not too much to say that this development of insight (with its concomitant refining of judgment) into one of the richest and most significant forms of esthetic expression points to cultural betterment and to that higher civilization of which we Americans so hopefully talk and dream, but which we, as a nation, do so little to further.

The practice and the appreciation of printing and of bookmaking as highly specialized arts have accompanied, if, indeed, they have not been among the most profound constructive influences of, every period of enlightenment since the Renaissance, and some of us may live to see the day when the powerful cultural force that they represent will supply the leaven needed to make an aggressive and self-seeking industrialism endurable to others than the go-getter and the money-grubber.

We still have, however, a long way to travel. The printing industry ranks, I believe, fifth in its annual "turn-over" (I hope I use this choice term correctly, having only a vague idea of its meaning), but printing and book-making as arts or as learned professions are only beginning to be understood. All the signs, it is true, are at the present moment promising. Many publishers are trying sincerely to redeem their sins of the past, and not without a certain success—they think that it will pay; journalists, businessmen, and even academicians have discovered Bruce Rogers and D. B. Updike, tho the first has been printing brilliantly and the second with intelligence and decorum for more than a quarter of a century. But while there is an increasingly lively interest in the way that books are made and a more widespread understanding of what good printing and good book-making are, there is still, in the last analysis, a formidable amount of ignorance about these matters. Perhaps "ignorance" is not the right word, for ignorance, unlike stupidity (particularly the stupidity, to paraphrase Oscar Wilde, that is the result of education) can be overcome. Our ills are, therefore, only in part attributable to ignorance; they arise chiefly from the acceptance of false standards, of false ideas with regard to what constitutes excellence, the acceptance, too often, of what the French call the faux bon.

This is, of course, in a country without artistic traditions, inevitable. But, recognizing our handicaps, should we not bend every effort to overcome them? Should we not seek enlightenment in the only place it can be found, among the traditions of the past, which means among the achievements of men not only of other periods than our own, but of other countries than ours. Thus only can we hope to form sound judgments, and—what is more important—thus only can we hope to bring into an existence a new and vital art of our own.

There can never be an appreciation by the general public of fine books and of fine printing as long as the public taste is dominated by the false standards of semi-intelligence, of fake culture, of the pretentious and the "arty." To a large extent our books—even those produced by some of our more capable printers—remain hopelessly bourgeois, the worst types representing a sort of super-Roycroft school of book-production. This could hardly be otherwise, for we Americans have had little opportunity to see fine books and fine printing, in the strict sense of that little-understood term. It is greatly to our credit, therefore, that our books are as good as lately they have become. Many American printers of the past generation have followed their calling for a lifetime, have actually lived and died in the profession, without ever having seen a really fine book. There are others today who are scarcely any better off. They have perhaps seen fleetingly some fine books at an exposition or they may own a few volumes by some of the masters. It is doubtful if the students in library schools receive any adequate training in the appraisal of books—either old or new—on the basis of their artistic merit. The majority of book-dealers and their employees are also very vague on the subject. They are familiar with the names of a few important printers, but utterly incapable of discriminating between their good work and their indifferent work. The Nonesuch Press of London has lately become a name to conjure with, but how many book-clerks realize that some of this press' publications are glaringly inferior to others? How often do we hear them extolling as "delightful," or even "exquisite" a book containing exceedingly bad imitation wood-cuts, colored by hand, and bound in an horrendous German batik paper!

I have said that our printers and "bookmen" occasionally see fine examples of printing, but such infrequent "exposures" cannot, in the nature of things, go very far toward giving them the equipment of knowledge necessary to a comprehension of the elements that enter into the production of fine books. Such slight knowledge as they thus acquire is not, as real knowledge should be, an actual possession; it is not sufficient to make their judgments sure, nor has it, in the case of printers, the convertibility that will enable them intelligently to base their own practice upon it.

In older civilizations than ours the conditions are different. The boy who is drawn to books sees and handles from his infancy volumes in which the fundamentals, at least, of good book-making have been observed. I do not mean, of course, luxurious volumes, nor am I unmindful that in all countries shoddy and badly printed books far outnumber the better sort. But a youth in England or on the continent can hardly fail to become familiar, thru books in the school library or in his home (an heirloom perhaps) with the fair page that reflects that primary sort of craftsmanship which was once an expression of instinct, but which is nowadays too often a mere objective formula.

The tradition is there. The intelligent printer in other countries learns the mechanics of his calling, but the fundamentals of good book-making may almost be said to be his heritage—an heritage handed down thru generations of intelligent, unselfconscious, and often noble practice. They possess, in other words, a tradition of rightness. This must not be taken to mean that there is not a great deal of corrupt and degraded printing done abroad,

FINE PRINTING

Instruction at THE LABORATORY PRESS

†CARNEGIE INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY†

HERE has never been a time when the importance of «fineness» in printing has been realized, both by the producers of printing and by their clients, as it is to-day. The standing of a printing-house depends more than ever upon its ability to produce work of superior excellence. It is, therefore, increasingly important that future proprietors and executives, as well as future designers and operatives, should be familiar with the best artistic and technical traditions and practices of the craft. ¶ To meet this need the Laboratory Press, at the Carnegie Institute of Technology, under the direction of Mr. Porter Garnett, offers the following courses, open to regular students & persons having practical experience: (1) INTRODUCTION TO FINE PRINTING,* (2) FINE PRINTING,† (3) LETTERING,‡ and (4) TYPE-DESIGN.§ Students who take the special training offered by these courses may become technically equipped executives, designers, consulting typographers, or practising craftsmen. In any of these capacities they will bring to the establishments with which they may become associated or which they may themselves conduct a various and special knowledge which will enable such establishments, by virtue of their services, to compete in the field of fine book-production and fine printing. The demand for accomplished printers is growing greater every day.

* [Junior year] Lectures on the traditions, principles, materials, and technique of fine printing; with study of the best typographic usage of the past and present.

† [Senior year] Laboratory practice, consisting of the production of typographic specimens in the form of broadsides, leaflets, and books, in limited editions, printed from specially selected types on fine papers.

‡ [Sophomore year] Drawing of roman alphabets in forms suitable for use in association with typography.

§ [Qualified Students only] Advanced letter-drawing. Interpretation & variation of traditional letter-forms, with a view to developing designs suitable for type.

or that the foreign printer is superior to the American. It means simply that a meet understanding of the architectonics of book-production is more prevalent among the rank and file of printers abroad than it is in this country. There the making of a good book, if not a fine one, is likely to be taken as part of the day's work. In this country, on the other hand, there are many printing establishments in which an order for a book is the occasion for a consultation of everyone from the proprietor to the chief compositor, with much scratching of polls, much consideration of what model to copy or imitate, and much talk of type-faces, margins, "stock," and particularly of costs and profits.

And now, just what is this "understanding" that we need in America? What is it that our printers, our librarians, and our book-clerks need to know in order that their judgment of books shall be sounder, more informed, and less a matter of guess work or of preferences that they can neither analyse or support? What are these needed factors of judgment and how can they be acquired? Can style and taste and rightness be explained? Can they be taught? To a certain extent I believe that they can, and the effort that is now being made in that direction at The Laboratory Press, of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, has, in the case of a number of students, produced some interesting results. But the course of instruction in which this attempt is being made and which is called Introduction to Fine Printing consists of two lectures a week for a period of nine months. It will be seen, therefore, how impossible it must be to deal here in a few hundred words (following a long preamble) with a subject having such a range and fertility.

The theory of instruction at The Laboratory Press is, broadly speaking, that before a student can be expected to practice typography on a high level, he must receive, in addition to his training in the mechanics of printing, a special training designed to develop his esthetic perceptions. If he is to produce work of distinction and originality, he must begin by acquiring—as far as his capabilities will permit—an apparatus of evaluation. He must develop—again, as far as his capabilities will permit—a feeling for authenticity, for rightness of design, for expressiveness. The means of accomplishing this are many and various, but I have room here to deal with only the most important one, the study (not a mere cursory examination) of masterpieces.

It is not to be supposed that in one year a student who has previously thought of printing in terms of display advertising, catalogs, folders, and "booklets," can reach the point of expertship that will enable him to make a valid attribution for an unidentified incunable. He will not be able perhaps to distinguish between Caxton's various types, he will not be able to tell the difference perhaps between a duodecimo by Aldus and one by the Giunti, between a Book of Hours by Kerver and one by Pigouchet, between a volume by Simon de Collines and one by Vascossan. He will by no means have reached a stage of connoisseurship equivalent to that which enables an archæologist to pass upon the authenticity of a Sasseta or to declare a supposed Sung painting to be a Japanese forgery of the late eighteenth century. But if knowledge interests him—and surprisingly it does interest some young Americans—he is put in the way of gaining it. Being still young, he has a not to be ignored advantage over many of the late starters in the printing profession who have recently discovered that printing is something more than a trade.

He knows something about the major canons of printing. He can tell the difference between the romans of da Spira and Jenson and Ratdolt. He knows at least the characteristics of the Estienne tradition. His dates may be more approximate than exact, but he knows the relationship in time and in style between Grandjean, Fournier, Didot, and Bodoni. He can distinguish between the half-dozen modern renderings of Jenson's and Garamond's types, between Bruce Rogers' use of printer's flowers and that of D. B. Updike, and he can probably recognize the genteel but rather dry and charmless technique of contemporary English printing at a distance of ten (or perhaps eleven) feet. He has been instructed in discrimination and—fastidiousness.

He has seen and handled and had analysed for him books and leaves by great printers, from the fifteenth century to the present day. These originals are augmented by numerous reproductions, notably the examples (something over a thousand) in Stanley Morison's "Four Centuries of Fine Printing" and "Modern Fine Printing" which, at The Laboratory Press, are used as textbooks for daily reference, altho I fear that most of the other copies of these valuable books are locked up in private collections. Many other source books are also available in the working library of the Press.

Not until the student has gone thru this preliminary training is he allowed to work rectangle) is the foundation of all good printing. It is, however, because of the perverse method in vogue of making "job composition" the basis of instruction in printing, the thing of which most American printers know the least. The single-page specimen is produced also because the student is given by that means a wider range of experience in different styles than would be the case if, in the woefully inadequate period of a single year, his time should be

T.J. COBDEN-SANDERSON

By WILLIAM ROTHENSTEIN

FTER a visit to Cobden-Sanderson I usually had the sense of a cushion of air between my feet and the ground. Intercourse with a few rare spirits has brought a similarly inspiring experience; and though only fleeting forms are given to a speaker's play of wit and wisdom, they can convey something of the convincing and exalting power which belongs to material creations. ¶ Craftsmen are by nature idealists; but their vision is sometimes dimmed by a doctrinaire tendency & confused by a misapprehension of what constitutes tradition. The writer has learned much from the scrupulous order and scholarly methods of craftsmen, but he has been sometimes aware of a hesitation in saying "Yes" to certain robust impulses of life, a reluctance to respond to Mistress Truth's appeal for reasonably fashionable garments in which to clothe herself. ¶ Cobden-Sanderson knew that the greatest of all traditions is the impulse to do honest work, an impulse the artist must obey, no matter where it leads him. He knew that mere likeness to a tradition of good workmanship or subject matter does not imply true relationship. Further, he did not mistake Puritanism of outlook for austerity of style. I think the peculiar interest of Cobden-Sanderson's conversation came from this: that he held, certainly in his later years, the aim of the practice of an art to lie in the steady education of the individual human spirit. Herein lay, for him, the importance of the pursuit of beauty. Each new triumph of his own lovely work was another milestone in his pilgrimage through life. Good craftsmanship is necessary because it brings to him who passionately desires it the ripe and sound fruits of wisdom and understanding, respect and tolerance. He believed the influence of works of art upon other people to be of less moment than the spiritual experience which gave them birth. So he devoted his ripe age to threshing the knowledge he had garnered throughout a long life of noble practice. Those who had not the privilege of listening to his talk may find its essence in his last work, Cosmic Vision. In this book one of his most delightful qualities is apparent—his generous response to all that seemed to him gallant, humane, and vital in life and in art. He understood clearly that each generation must express its vision in its own way, and that this way is likely to shock, for a time, previous judgments. His culture was too broad to permit of his misreading the past, or of his saying aught but God-speed to the present and future. His own pursuit of beauty had led him to certain conclusions, and he desired to adjust his faith and his conclusions to the values he believed to be permanent, before he looked from the windows for the last time on the river he loved. ¶ These conclusions, this faith, Cobden-Sanderson expressed up to the end with singular power. Fastidious in taste, a little precious in manner, with something of the dandy and much of the man of the world in his social bearing and outlook, he was possessed by a demonic spirit of faith in the power of human idealism. Yet, like most men who dwell apart from their fellows, he seemed to know more of the ways of the great world than those who live in it. He had a mordant wit, a keen judgment of men and manners. Those with whom he fell out he was inclined to judge unreasonably. But his firm belief in the opportunity which lies before every man to attain spiritual equilibrium as the end and object of his life, will be remembered by his friends as the dominant characteristic of one of the most significant and attractive figures of our time.

at the production of specimens of fine printing, and then only if his preliminary work has been satisfactory, if he displays insight and aptitude. This restriction applies only to the course in Fine Printing; the student has had three years of instruction in other branches in the Department of Printing before he touches type in The Laboratory Press. How well he turns to account what he has learned of pure theory plus a knowledge of past performances, how capable he is of working in the best traditions without falling into imitateness, may appear in the reproductions shown herewith.

It will be noticed that the specimens, altho single pages, or anopistographs, printed on one side of the sheet only, have the character of book composition. This is done because the book page (the eternal given over to the making of actual books. This restricted opportunity for practice is a serious handicap to the fulfilment of the purposes of The Laboratory Press and can only be overcome, it would seem, thru graduate work.

And now that the method of attaining thru education a certain end—a theoretical and practical knowledge of good printing—has been here rather sketchily set forth, let us see if, for the benefit of the curious (the amateur, the librarian, the book clerk) some primary and essential quality that characterizes good printing and good books can be, in a similar sketchy manner, indicated?

It may seem rather silly to say that a book should be "bookish," and yet, it seems to me, that we have in that apparently equivocal term the very touchstone and secret of the whole subject. The quality that I call "bookish" is subtle and elusive and, today, alas, quite rare. What is it? One can only attempt an answer. The bookishness of old books is not imparted by age but by something implicit in their design and structure, some quality of rightness. Certain modern printers succeed in giving to their work the same quality (the late Sir Horace Hart, of the Oxford University Press, was notably successful in this respect); others fail completely and will always fail. Some types are bookish, others are not, and yet one printer will use an unbookish type and obtain a bookish effect while another will reverse the method and the result. A line of hand-drawn letters may be bookish or it may not. A single letter drawn insensitively may destroy the whole. The commercial lettering of today, in spite of the high degree of skill it exhibits, is almost never bookish. The same thing is true of ornamental initials, even those that are based upon classical models. The use of italics for a single word—an article or a preposition—will, in one case, completely destroy the bookish quality of a title-page and, in another, it will have no such result. The same is true of a word or line of spaced capitals. One might go on with these minutae, with these significant trifles, almost indefinitely, and in doing so be aware of thinking always in terms of architecture—of the minor terms of architecture, of detail and surfaces—and constantly aware, also, of the major factors of proportion, scale, and balance.

It must be evident that all of this, if not irrelevant, is, paradoxically perhaps, unrevealing and inconclusive. It must be said, then that the sense of the bookish quality in printing is a matter of apperception, of feeling. The person who is unable to perceive the presence or the absence of this quality in a book should, if he wishes to judge books, become familiar with it (if he can) thru study. There is only one way to pursue such a study and that is to examine and analyse (not merely scan) the best examples of the printed book, and as many as possible, from the past and of the present.

It should be said, finally that the chief fault with many of the so-called fine books of the present day is that they are either mere pastiches that lack originality or, if seemingly original in treatment, they too often represent a taking over of job-printing methods into book production. On the other hand, no greater service can be rendered to printing than the taking over of book technique into commercial practice (observing, of course, the requirements of suitability), and it is this that is, at least in part, the purpose of The Laboratory Press.

Much information—which, after all, is only information and not knowledge—can be had from reading books about printing, but the best of these are not easily available. The layman, however, will be rewarded and instructed by reading "A Brief Survey of Printing," by Stanley Morison and Holbrook Jackson (Knopf) and "In the Day's Work," by D. B. Updike (Harvard University Press). The sincere seeker for knowledge, whether layman or practitioner, will find in most well equipped libraries the following books which are recommended: Bouchot, "The Printed Book"; De Vinne, "Plain Printing Types," "Modern Composition," and "Title-Pages"; Crane, "The Decoration of Books"; Jacobi, "Some Notes on Printing"; Updike, "Printing Types"; Gress, "The Art and Practice of Typography." The Fleuron, an English annual, is important and the monthly "Book-Production Notes" of B. R. Newdigate in the London Mercury should not be missed. Any library, public or private, that contains a copy of Stanley Morison's "Four Centuries of Fine Printing" and his "Modern Fine Printing" should be a goal for the genuinely interested amateur.

Present Tendencies of the Typography of Books

By William A. Kittredge

Director of Design and Typography, R. R. Donnelley & Sons Company, Chicago

IT is a hopeful sign that even the conservative and successfully entrenched older publishing houses are showing evidences of a typographic and design-consciousness in the production of their

At a time in which one of the most original art expressions is that of jazz music, could book design remain fixed at any cold and colorless standard? Mr. Knopf is credited with stirring things up and the making of jolly, gay books, invitingly fresh in paper, typography, jackets and bindings. And before his time Way and Williams, Copeland and Day, Stone and Kimball, R. H. Russell and others made books of varied design, sound typography, well printed and bound.

Bruce Rogers and D. B. Updike always were classic and treasured specimens. We thank God for them and hope they may long continue to set such glorious standards and examples.

Yes, the present tendencies of design in the typography of books is decidedly hopeful. An immense improvement is to be noted in the publications of this year over those of last. A very good barometer of this is the Exhibition of The American Institute of Graphic Arts entitled "Fifty Books of 1925." Comprising, for the most part, trade editions of current publications, the quality of style and craftsmanship shown in the books this year exhibited greatly exceeds that of former years.

The fact that a three dollar book, "Anchors of Tradition" from the Yale University Press, won the prize for greatest excellence, is significant in proving that limitations of time, expense and materials do not prevent fine accomplishment in the art of book production. Thruout the publications of the University presses at Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Chicago is to be observed a conscious and usually suc-

the forest floor was starred with yellow violets. That forest was in truth a church of vast and solemn sanctity. The stillness was its music: the solitude its invocation. And the more as our devotion was unconscious did it purge our souls of their vague tremors: for here the wilderness disclosed its peacefulness.

We had heard and read too much of the virtual impenetrability of the mountain regions of Tierra del Fuego and in our short inland excursions had experienced enough of the difficulties of travelling there not to have realized that in attempting to cross the virgin wilderness of Brecknock Peninsula our endurance might be taxed to its very limit. While there are two established routes across the mountains from the north to Beagle Channel, these are at the eastern end of Lago Fognano where the mountain ranges are less lofty and rugged. The farthest western passage was made by the explorer priest Padre Agostini when, accompanied by an Italian Alpine mountaineer, he crossed with great hazard and difficulty from near the outlet of Lago Fognano. Considering Brecknock Peninsula as extending westward from the head of Admiralty Sound, there is no record of its having been crossed: and certainly the lofty Valdivieso and Darwin range present a barrier that might well deter men from attempting it. Nevertheless, a serviceable passage across the peninsula would considerably shorten the route from Punta Arenas to Ushuaia.

recent books. Forced into animation thru the popularity of the more brilliant publications of the "younger set" of publishers, they show a naiveté in the use of Batik covers and type flowers that is always entertaining. Thus to leaven the lump of their general publishing along the traditional line!

Some of the impetus towards finer things has unquestionably come from a pressure without the country. The presses of England and France have been exceedingly busy since the war in turning out beautiful works. Books illustrated in black and white, and colors; wood-engraved books; books on exotic and hand-made papers; special editions of classic works; all have found ready and eager purchasers over here,

The investment in imported books might prove astonishing. At any rate, the flood has been increasing and to an extent, because we have had little of a similar nature to offer—too few æsthetic expressions of the work of great artists in book form. An occasional "Wilderness" or "Voyaging" by a Rockwell Kent; an "Iron Men and Wooden Ships" or a "Full and By" by a Wilson—quickly bought by an admiring public.

The private presses of England are turning out large works at large prices and books at forty to one hundred dollars seem to have a ready sale. Stanley Morison's "Four Centuries of Fine Printing" and "Modern Fine Printing" at about seventy-five dollars each were quickly out of print. A three-volume Blake at forty dollars, not to mention too numerous others, causes one to wonder at the lack of an American source of supply for this quite apparent demand. Splendid material exists and awaits a publisher of æsthetic appreciation and discriminating taste. Edward Penfield, recognized abroad as one of our greatest artists, long ago completed a set of coach and carriage drawings, the most authentic study of the subject ever attempted. They have never been published. Guernsey Moore's work in Philadelphia deserves a book and would long ago have had one abroad—Jules Guerin—Maxfield Parrish—George Bellows—Arthur I. Keller. Who will publish them for a long standing audience?

In spite of this lament, introduced here as an interlude and shadow against the higher lights of this article, the prospect for continually improved book design is splendid. When we find a publisher interesting himself in better paper and the manufacture of special papers at a good mill watermarked alone for the works of one author, then we know something is brewing. A book designer interests another mill in bringing out a one hundred per cent rag book paper in order that his books can endure. The owner of one paper mill turns from the making of commercial bond paper to the making of superior fine book papers as near as possible in color, strength and texture rivalling hand-made models. Materials will not be lacking for the ambitious bookmaker.

A pressure from the publisher on his printer, in turn passed on to the manufacturer of composing machines, results in some admirable types for the composition of books. Bodoni, Garamont, Italian Old Style, Poliphilus, authentic Caslons and

Baskervilles await the typographer now. The breed of types is improving so that it is even becoming fashionable for the publisher to make a statement of the race horse type he is employing in his book as well as the pedigree of paper and place of production. In one recent instance a publisher's enthusiasm persuaded him to devote a whole page at the end of his book to "A Note on the Type in Which This Book Is Set."

Quite obviously an improvement of taste will come to people type-conscious and the work of this publisher deserves approval. Bad books and trashy printing have cluttered too many bookstore tables. Only moron intelligences should tolerate them. They insult and offend thoughtful people.

The infrequent publications of the private presses bring much of life and hope to the scene. Directed usually by ardent amateurs with feeling and sentiment for their work, they bring out books of original and interesting formats. Such books as come from Rudge; George Santayana's "Lucifer" published by the Dunster House Bookshop and printed at the Southworth Press, Portland, Maine; the books of Robert Ballou, Will Ransom, The Fleuron Press, Pascal Covici, Aventuros, and The Dial Press all have an originality and virility however much we may not agree about their design.

The riot of color in book jackets shows no let-up. The Chicago University Press issues a "Manual of Style" in a tangerine-orange wrapper! "Segelfors-Town" by Knut Hamsun and "Sea Horses" by Francis Brett Young both sport poster pictorial jackets of no mean quality. The book jacket today is the bobbed hair, rolled hose and short skirt expression of the publishing venture.

Sometimes a stunning jacket wraps a dull book and at other times a splendid book comes in a plain manilla or tissue wrapper. Too often the book jacket design bears no relation to the tout ensemble while it is a favorite contention of the writer that it should very definitely do so. How often have we hurried up to a counter and picked up a book prettily encased to be dashed by the drab insides.

One of the most fortunate book-jacket enterprises has been that of the Michael Arlen books. Black-and-gold and silver-

THIS appealed to me once, as it appealed to Master Shandy, as a very pretty bit of sentiment; but now the sentiment is as old fashioned as the punctuation, and false to fact; for science instructs us that the world is not wide enough for both flies and humans. Before science interested itself in the matter the fly was regarded with more than toler-and-black wrappers exactly suited to the idea and contents of these popular volumes give them an individual, distinguished, snobbish appearance in any window or shop. They look so rich as to be received by any one as a compliment.

A very critical taste for fine books will be rewarded by a few volumes. "Joseph Conrad: The Man" designed by Bruce Rogers and published by William Edwin Rudge is such a one; Updike's "In The Day's Work"; the new Aventuros Cassanova in twelve volumes with illustrations by Rockwell Kent; "Chinese Painting" printed by Updike, these are some outstanding.

Craftsmanship in book production is encouraged and stimulated by journals and reviews concerning themselves with printing. The Printing Art was once an influence and we are now to welcome the revival of two others in quarterly form—Ars Typographica under the editorship of Douglas McMurtrie in New York and The Graphic Arts published by Henry Lewis Johnson in Boston. The American Printer under the editorship of Oswald and Gress has always been a good influence, and many who now direct the destinies of American presses have been helped by its example and counsel.

Altogether the prospect for increasingly better book production seems assured. Decent type, permanent paper, suitable illustration, combined with skill and care, bring the publisher confidence and good will from the public he serves.

The Merrymount Press of Boston

A Check-List of Typical Productions

Prepared by D. B. Updike

AT the request of the editors of Publishers' Weekly and in the interests of students and collectors in the field of modern printing, Mr. Updike has made a selection of titles from the extended and varied output of The Merrymount Press during the past thirty years. Those starred were among the Fifty Best Books for 1923, 1924, and 1925, chosen by the American Institute of Graphic Arts. Those double-starred received a medal from the same organization.

Mr. Updike's own work on "Printing Types" has received international recognition such as is accorded to few books and is a masterpiece of printing as well as a master work on printing; his volume on the craft of the printer, "In the Day's Work," is of especial value to the book collector both for its form and contents and other important books on printing history have borne the Merrymount imprint, such as, Nichols' "Isaiah Thomas," 1912, Benton's "Baskerville," 1914, Mores' "English Typographical Founders," 1924.

Twice the American Institute of Graphic Arts has given to Mr. Updike the highest honor in its power and each of the Institute's annual exhibits of fine book making has contained several volumes with the imprint of The Merrymount Press, Boston.

The Revival of the Woodcut in Modern Book-Illustration

By Bertrand Zadig

STRONG feeling among book-publishers has lately developed toward recognizing in the woodcut the ideal illustration for the printed page. It should be of interest to see the how before the why of this popularity.

The 15th century marked the first appearance of books, printed books, in our western sphere. Already the Orient had produced what was new to Europe, but differing from these early Italian and German volumes, the Japanese block-books were a series of pictures relieved only by an explanation, a moral in most cases, set within the illustration itself. These books were entirely woodcuts, designed and intended to be made up of as many as 28 separate blocks. The marvelous work in these prints completely amazed the good burghers who received them from Far East Traders. It is the astonishment that they caused which may convince the historian that there was an invention of woodcutting in Europe, apart from any Japanese influence.

It seems strange to find our art developing quite parallel with that of the East. The European woodcut also was designed for color, it was meant to express a moral, it was to become the art of the people.

The first books were for the people. Religious documents, philosophy and ancient writings, hitherto accessible only thru libraries of the rich, were set in type and distributed from town to town. Craftsmen appeared that cut a solid page on wood and so, by assembling page after page of the blocks, could in the end print a book. Once, however, the first and only edition was run off, or rather pressed off, the blocks that had meant untold labor and skill, were useless. The disappointments that followed early book making must have brought about the invention of leaded type.

It is needless to go into the controversies as to the inventor of type. German or Italian, in either case, the maker of books by means of movable type realized that he must enliven a solid page of text, and the printer went back to the woodcutter.

We find here cycles in woodcutting, a rise then a fall; a perfection of use, then its misuse and degeneration. But the woodcut in the form of a picture came back to its former glory, and from now on it remained confined to pictures and soon it rises above the place of an "added attraction." It is the period of Dürer, Rethel and Cranach that emancipates it and brings woodcutting to an independent state.

Dürer, the best known, makes use of the vogue of that day towards graphic expression by designing illustrations directly for the block. But Dürer is an etcher and does not realize the limitations of his new medium until he himself has tried a hand at it. A work attributed to Dürer's own graver, the "Apocalypse," is a print of rare power that can prove the value of the artist doing his own mechanics.

Hans Holbein produced the 54 episodes of the "Dance of Death," the "Dance Macabre" that has been repeated ever again to the present day. The text of "The Dance of Death" series, made up separately, were threaded in between the pictures, but, if omitted, the appeal of the story would never suffer, so strongly convincing were these blocks, even then, when woodcuts were losing in favor to the aristocratic copperplate.

More and more was expected of the woodcut. The need was felt to spread intelligence more easily among the masses. Books were expensive, and still worse, illiteracy was discouraging. The language of pictures must help out again.

The churches had their propaganda. Their dogma must be ever-evident. What better way than pictures, for just as easily as we may read a Japanese print, the message of the early "Flugblatt" was spoken by the caricature-like treatment of woodcut.

Much later a renaissance of the woodcut came with Thomas Bewick. At the close of the 18th century he startled the profession, by publication of his white-line illustrations, especially his animal series. The great innovation was due to a change of method in cutting. Up to then cuts were made on soft wood, working on the plank, the use of boxwood afforded far greater possibilities. By working hard-seasoned cross sections of this wood, the scope of gradation was so immense, that within the shortest time, followers had sprung up in every part of the globe. Artists realized that here was a way to reproduce faithfully what was heretofore impossible on the rough and rocky plank-cut.

For this discovery something must be sacrificed. That naive charm of a limited medium was lost completely, making way for a certain sophistication due to the simpler and more positive cutting. But to make up there was the gain of the artist or rather the designer becoming his own engraver. As Bewick practiced in England so Paul Revere in the American colonies. Revere, of the midnight ride and recent movie fame, was perhaps a better patriot than woodcutter, but he nevertheless opened the way for Abbey, Pyle and Timothy Cole. And thereby also he is responsible for the present rebirth of an "ever popular art."

The woodcut of the 80's, tho a misuse of the art, was a great feature of American publishing. Craftsmen had achieved so facile a handling of boxwood and graver, that they began rivaling the camera—which was "satisfying consumer demand." Long after the introduction of mechanical photo-engraving, we find Harper's and Scribner's magazines flooding the world with "photos on wood." The oblivion that followed this practice was held up somewhat by such glories as that of Cole's. Thereby Cole's engravings are increasing their value and popularity each year, despite prophesies that only such of the more moderns can survive that will combine the design and the actual cutting in one hand.

Arriving at our present period, it becomes apparent that the difficult art of woodcutting is so powerful a medium, we must "relegate it to Limbo" when its time comes. The age old art of Japan has not yet overcome this perpetual dying. At the first decline of our woodcut art the prints of Hiroshige had brought the work of the east to a height of perfection. And now, when aniline dyes and the fusion of European ideas have sent down the standard of Japanese art, the young western woodcut is at the opening of its most glorious period.

Sometime in 1910 appeared the prints of one, Edvard Munch. His well-known self-portrait gives a good conception of the working of this pioneer among the moderns. Lacking all finish and knowledge of the cutting itself, it tells of the man who is searching for a new way of expression. You can fairly see this worker, this peintre-graveur, bending over a plank, succeeding with clean cutting here, crudely ripping out his mass there. Munch was followed by many, but a newly felt freedom sent most of them off at a tangent. The expressionists and dadists were credited with the output of these embryo-moderns. This acted like a cold shower, for the object was to arrive at a new style, and why exert yourself if the honor goes to a rival?

The years following were not important for the woodcut and this slowing down gave publishers time to consider again the bookmaking of the time of Morris and Crane. Neither Walter Crane nor William Morris have ever been surpassed in illustration. Tho we feel today that a page of type should retain its own importance. Updike, in compiling his pages of type, calls them a study in survivals. And the survived are only such pages as are unhampered, not crowded in by over-balanced decoration. With the volumes of Crane's time there is the feeling of overcrowding. It becomes a strain on the eye to do any reading of the text. Surely the type should be a decorative element, but not at a sacrifice.

The boxwood art broke out in France, the new France, as a veritable craze. England followed slowly, for it must be remembered that the best of English prints, those of Frank Brangwyn, were cut by Belgian craftsmen, students of the English master. Gordon Craig has done his share and of course William Nicholson. Nicholson was the teacher of Craig, so in the work of both will be found that certain softness, so foreign to the present French woodcut.

It may stand as a proof of the world-wide popularity of Nicholson, that his soft blacks are accepted by the mass as a characteristic of woodcutting. For that reason, the trend of work done by the present group in France must slowly edge its way into the mind of the average book-buyer. Already the selected few, those true lovers of books and of bookmaking, treasure the prints of Vox, of Herman-Paul and their colleagues in Paris, and their publishers, Leon Pichon, master-printer, Artheme Fayard of Le Livre de Demain, Ferenczi of Le Livre Moderne Illustré and a small number of fellow minds, all realized the importance of reaching the broad masses. They have set to work and succeeded in editing good works illustrating them thru cooperation of excellent artists and publishing them for a news-stand distribution.

An American expert and champion of good bookmaking, just returned from Paris, tells of the sensation these new publications created. And it must be striking to see newsstands piled high with the yellow and cream-bound volumes, and to see them sold in a manner and at the price of our Life and New Yorker. Think of an illustrated novel being sold in greater numbers than a proverbial American funny-sheet, and that at the equivalent of fifteen cents.

The vogue is not confined to France. Germany, known always for its books, has trained few men in the new thought. In fact "New Thought" has become a "Schlagwort," a slogan. The names of Willy Knabe, Prof. Schnarrenberger, of Hans Pape and Eduard Ege are finding their way to us.

German art has been reputed to be heavy, brutal. Yet the French are leaning towards a heavier treatment than the present German.

And then as to Italy which shares the honors of early bookmaking with Germany, its present work is not unlike that of the northerners, except in the group headed by Adolpho De Carolis, who shows in his work a feeling very much like that of the masters of the early Italian school.

Last and most important to us is American bookmaking and it may well stand any comparisons. With all the admiration we have for European art, there is no need of ever following Europe to the extent of copying their thought or their ways, but made up of so many varied elements American art is rather a bastard affair, and cannot be easily classed.

During the past year the work of Paul Honoré has drawn much attention. His illustrations to "Tales of the Silverlands" has no doubt helped win the Newbery Medal for C. J. Finger. Rarely will you find subjects so well treated or blocks so well cut. It awes me to follow his composition. It gives me joy as from an old master to study the cuts of his graver. Honoré has executed some other volumes, every one in the same spirit.

Edward A. Wilson is now preparing a volume "Full and By" which may exceed in excellence his "Iron Men and Wooden Ships." In the "Iron Men" he set an example of varying a series of woodblocks with dry-brush drawings, whenever they will fully express the thought. It is an experiment successful only to the woodcutter.

Wilson is one of the group that includes such men as Illian, Lewis and J. J. Murphy. As a body they have done more for the revival of the woodcut in America than any other group.

THE BRILLIANT TECHNIQUE OF S. GARNETT GOESLE AND H. F. ROESE

Among the younger men stand out the names of S. Garnett Goesle, of H. F. Roese, of J. J. Jones and a few others.

The work of Goesle and of Roese received some excellent comment, when they joined forces a year ago to produce for a private group a book, truly deserving the term book. It rivals early book art to conceive the design of a book and work it out as a unit, illustrations, text and binding. The prints of both men, individually, are fast becoming known to collectors in New York. Their subjects, hand colored in the proofs, are extremely decorative and, it is understood, will be used to make a juvenile to be published on completion in fall.

But as with the children's books of C. B. Falls, picture collections of this kind are not only for the children. Collectors are proud to own them.

A word must be said about Rockwell Kent. Kent knows the art of woodcutting and his pen and inks, or rather his brush drawings in "Voyaging" and "Wilderness" may well be judged on the standard of the woodcut. And furthermore Rockwell Kent has the gift of not only painting his emotions, but also of writing them and so links the every-day-world with the world of the artist's mind.

The Rightness of Good Book-Making

BOOKSELLERS can take a keen interest in good bookmaking for two quite different but very practical reasons. Good bookmaking has a subtle influence on every type of book buyer, increasing the lure of the book he is examining whether fiction, poetry, history or what-not and hastening the decision to purchase. Good bookmaking is appropriate bookmaking, whereby the accumulated wisdom of an ancient craft in making visual appeal thru type and paper is applied under present day conditions. A well-made book, like a well-made chair, appeals to the eye because it is "right" and far more people appreciate that "rightness" than can explain their reasons for their feeling. The well-made book is first of all to the bookseller a practical aid to increased sales.

And on a second count the well-made book is important to the bookseller because there are more and more people among his potential customers who are collecting fine books for the love of them as beautiful things. Collectors are on the increase and while first editions, early rarities, and special subjects, offer broad fields for treasured libraries there is in the book beautiful a tremendous range of appeal that has only begun to be played upon, and, fortunately, beautiful books are issuing from the presses today to enrich the accumulations of past eras of high craftsmanship.

Leaders who can raise the craft of printing to a fine art cannot be expected to develop in every generation but the present day is fortunate and books are being produced by such men as Updike, Rogers and Rollins, which future collectors will be glad to secure when the present day collectors shall scatter their libraries. Booksellers who can gather about them a clientele for the more distinguished examples of present day bookmaking are finding it a worthwhile department and one which gives the bookseller a wonderful opportunity to put to use his best knowledge and taste. If, as Whitman said, we must have great audiences if we are to have great poets, it is equally true of great printing and bookmaking. The appetite for the best created by intelligent enthusiasm of the booksellers can bring to publication the type of books on which such enthusiasm grows.

The Publisher as a Creative Artist

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE portrays the publishing temperament of John Lane, in his charming random recollections of the '90s appearing in the Saturday Evening Post, and soon to be published by Doubleday. Speaking of Lane his observations on that publisher sum up the attributes of the perfect publisher. He says "When we examine the work of the men of the '90s, one might almost say they had little in common but their publisher. That publisher, however, was a remarkable one, no ordinary Barabbas. We are so accustomed to regard authors and publishers as natural enemies that we forget that a publisher may occasionally be something like a creative artist. By his selective encouragement of new talents he may be instrumental in setting new fashions in literature, and by the general character of his business be no little of a contributory creator of taste."

As Lane, the famous publisher of the '90's is remembered, will not publishers today, by their "selective encouragement of new talents," also be known.

This fashioning and moulding, to a degree, of the public's taste by the creative publisher has continued on apace, and today we may look on the lists of various publishers and applaud their contribution to literature and the development of its appreciation.

Not only, however, is it the character of the work published that endears a publisher to his public but the manner in which it is presented, as Mr. Le Gallienne points out in the case of Lane; "One knew a Bodley Head book at a glance"—"Lane had the cooperation of Ricketts and Shannon in several of his early volumes,"—"Had Ricketts and Shannon been alchemists their operations could not have been veiled in more thrilling secrecy or the results awaited with more hushed expectancy."

Is the public any less interested today, than in the '90's, in the good book, beautifully made?

How the Other Half Lives

THE title which Jacob Riis gave to his famous book many years ago has a suggestiveness that has brought it into use many times and for many purposes. He used the phrase to call people's attention to social conditions, to the fact that the half of our people who are comfortable had little or no curiosity as to how the other half lived. We venture to use it to call attention to a common business condition, to the fact that many business men especially retailers isolated in their own communities have little or no interest in how other shopkeepers handle their business.

The established business man is often inclined to believe that his methods must be the best there are otherwise how could he have achieved the level of prosperity that is his. His energy and imagination have carried a business thus far and if others want to look in and see how he does it they may, but he has little reason to go out of his way to examine the methods of others.

Yet here in the midst of his progress is a sign of decay. No business man can be wholly sufficient unto himself and no one immersed in self satisfaction can tell at what moment others are moving ahead to assume a more advanced position. The student of retailing who has opportunity to move about the country is constantly aware of the varying degrees of open-mindedness that exist in bookstores. In some there is an anxiety to hear about what the other man is doing and what new methods he is trying, in others an offer of suggestions from other cities is met with the reply that in that particular city marketing conditions are "different".

It is perfectly true that a bookseller is offered many impractical and unavailable suggestions if he will give his attention to such conversation, but if he has his own conditions clearly in mind he can pick out the wheat from the chaff and apply the right ideas to his outlet.

A recent visitor to the Pacific Coast testified recently that openmindedness to store ideas was an especial characteristic of the booksellers of that section. If so they are taking a shortened route toward raising bookselling to an even broader and surer prosperity in that great book market.

Price Cutting in New York

IN the effort to demonstrate to the public that their prices on cots, clocks, double-boilers, etc., etc., are the lowest in the city, three New York department stores have been warming up the old price cutting bitterness in the book departments, each solemnly acclaiming to its clientele that it is against their life-long principles to sell merchandise at the prices asked by the others. Every customer is supposed to be persuaded that if fixed price merchandise like books is sold at a cut, that all other merchandise is low even tho there is no list price by which to prove the point. Books, which of necessity use list prices, have always been sufferers from the price cutters and it has been sadly true that producers of books have not always been far sighted enough to understand the far reaching harm that is done by price-cutting episodes as a restraint and set-back to a broadening market for books.

The great merchants of the country have, to a large extent, learned sounder methods of business building than a generation ago and the big department store outlet for books taken the country over has been made possible by the standardized price. In spite of the cost of the litigation on prices fifteen years ago it probably has been worth what it cost as during the extended period of discussion the big stores made long strides toward better merchandising methods.

Macmillan Opens in Atlanta

THE Publishers' Weekly has several times in the past few years had occasion to point out the signs in the sky of the real and significant revival of interest in book buying thruout the southern states. For a long period this had been considered, except in certain large cities, poor book territory, but the new spirit of the South, led by such progressive commonwealths as North Carolina, Texas and, under its new prosperity, Florida, and such cities as Richmond, New Orleans, Nashville and Atlanta, has changed these conditions, and educational development is pointing the way to a larger book consumption, which publishers of all kinds will welcome and be quick to take advantage of. Educational progress is following economic rehabilitation in the South and for a time the outlets for books will be scattered, but the signs are too sure and promising to be overlooked, and it will not be surprising if within a few years the southern territory will bring greatly improved returns for the time expended by the salesmen in its cities.

It is particularly significant to receive an announcement from The Macmillan Company, which has for some time been adopting the plan of sectional depositories, that it is to open a depository for general trade books at Atlanta from which it will serve the southern states east of the Mississippi and north thru Tennessee and North Carolina. Here the company will carry a full stock of trade books and station two men in charge, a manager and assistant. The territory west of the Mississippi is already being served by the Dallas depository, and Kentucky is considered closer to the Chicago depository. The Macmillans are basing this move on the facts shown by their sales records, an increase in which will come from depository service.

Carolina's Roll of Honor

THE new position of North Carolina in American letters is illustrated from a letter of Archibald Henderson's in the Saturday Review. "North Carolina is the native State of Walter Hines Page, the most gifted letter-writer of our day; of O. Henry, the supreme short story writer of his day in the United States; of Wilbur Daniel Steele, the ablest living American writer of the short story; of Edwin Anderson Alderman, America's greatest living orator; of Hatcher Hughes, the brilliant Broadway dramatist; of John V. A. Weaver, arresting American poet in the new manner; of those masters of stage and film, Augustin Daly and Cecil B. DeMille."

Southern Baptist Bookstores

ONE of the most significant movements in the book fields of the South has been the completion during the last few months of the arrangement for co-operative methods of book distribution in the Southern Baptist field. The Baptist Sunday School Board of Nashville, I. J. Van Ness, secretary, has taken over the Baptist book distribution headquarters in Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Georgia, Virginia, South Carolina and Florida. H. C. McGill, superintendent of the stores, has been working out a careful business system, so that this great chain system can adequately serve the many states, and under his charge there will be ten bookstores.

The Southern Baptist Convention has a membership of 3,500,000, nearly three times as many as there are in the Northern Baptist Convention. Nashville has been the recognized center for the business end of the denomination, and the two large denominational colleges are in Louisville and Fort Worth.

The significant part of this coordination of interests is the business system to be put behind each outlet, a feature which has been often lacking in small state depositories. The selling of magazines and Sunday School periodicals will be done wholly from the Nashville headquarters, so as to free the state agent for the business of book-selling. Behind each of the stores will be a coordination of buying and a system of exchange of stock; also, an educational campaign for the publicity of books, for the training of salesmen and the perfecting of store system. Mr. McGill plans to see that the minister and school superintendent in office in each state shall be kept aware of what is going on in their stores.

Fifty per cent of each store is to be owned by the Baptists of the state which it is serving, and the Nashville headquarters will contribute the other half of the capital.

What Paper for Books

By Franklin Spier

Publishing and Advertising Counsel

I MET a printer the other day who had decided to go into the publishing business. "Confidentially," he said, "the real reason I'm making the plunge is because I have just had several tons of book paper left on my hands by a customer."

"Are you sure it is book paper?" I asked.

"It's paper, and it will print, and it's about the right size," he answered. I shuddered.

A large and established publisher called up his paper jobber. "I expect to do about a dozen books this spring, most of them novels," he said; "I want you to give me the lowest price you possibly can on, say, five tons of novel stock."

Innocent conversations, both, to the uninitiated; but anyone who cared about the progress of the printing art in America would shudder at what he could read between the lines. Here was ignorance, working hand in hand with indifference, to lower the standard of the art, and to flood the libraries and bookstores with an inferior product. Booksellers, even if they had the expert knowledge which would enable them to distinguish between the good and the bad in book making, would be powerless to counteract the faulty direction at the source of production.

The selection of the right paper is certainly not the whole of good book making, but it is a fundamental and important part.

The following necessarily sketchy summary of book papers and their uses is intended as a guide and a prod to the publisher who is loath to devote care and attention to devising appropriate and harmonious formats for his books. Incidentally it may help booksellers to an appreciation of the problems involved.

As to what constitutes the right paper for pamphlets, catalogs, labels, or letterheads, I am willing to let the printers and paper men, who feel controversially inclined, have the entire battle ground. There, only use and availability are checks on one's personal preferences.

But books, as they are the oldest of printed forms, have a tradition which governs within almost iron-clad limits, the selection of paper. Size is the first and most obvious consideration; for custom has determined how books should appear.

Just as the lover of sea stories, for instance, goes to a new Conrad yarn with a whoop of joy because he has learned that a Conrad story is the kind he likes, so the lover of any kind of fiction turns instinctively to a book that measures approximately 5 inches by 7½ inches and an inch and a quarter thick—altho he may not know the dimensions nor realize that he is doing so.

The fan whose soul is attuned to the poetic lyre darts eagerly to the slim volume, tall and somewhat fancifully bound. The deckle edge of such a book is as much of a bait for the poetry lover as the metric miasma between the covers which, indeed, he does not see unless he opens the book.

Without reinforcing this argument unduly, I will state dogmatically that the publisher or printer who wants to attain a public sale for his books must conform more or less closely to the established standards of sizes and qualities of paper. And these traditional sizes and standards have to a great extent a logical foundation. The test of any article, in the last analysis, is its suitability for the purpose in hand, and that happens to be just the reason that certain papers have become firmly established as the customary ones for various kinds of books.

Common Errors

I see with distressing frequency novels printed on super paper or on stock so thick and stiff as to resemble cardboard; textbooks or supplementary readers printed on coated stock altho they contain not a single halftone or even linecut illustration; inconsequential records or memorabilia, usually advertising matter of some kind, printed on a handmade, deckle-edged paper suitable for a limited, autographed edition of a great master.

I have seen all sizes and conditions of paper used in the making of books. Odds and ends that the printer or the paper jobber had left over, peculiar sizes specified by an author with strong predilections but no experience in the manufacture of books; library shelves filled with odds and ends of assorted sizes ranging from quarto to 32mo regardless of the nature of the contents. Against this heterogeneous lack of uniformity and of good taste, lovers of good printing no less than librarians raise their voices in protest.

Popular Fiction

Novels intended for wide public distribution must necessarily be printed on a fairly high bulking antique sheet of good white color. It is unfortunate but true that the book-buying public buys its entertainment largely by the inch. Of course the man who wants to buy Romain Rolland or May Sinclair, will buy Rolland or Sinclair in any thickness of volume, but he is influenced unconsciously between the thick bulking and the thin bulking edition. As for the great mass of people who go into a bookstore to "buy a good story" without having any particular item in mind—and booksellers will tell you that these constitute nine-tenths of the visitors to their stores—bulk is a very largely controlling factor. It is almost impossible to sell a novel for $1.75, $2.00, or $2.50 (at present the prevailing prices for popular fiction) unless it measures at least an inch in bulk.

I have often wondered at this vagary of the reading public. Undoubtedly it would be very much more convenient for everybody concerned if the public could be induced to buy books for their convenience rather than their thickness. With the average floor space in city apartments renting at the premium it does these days, it would seem that if our books, and consequently our bookshelves, could occupy half the space they do, it would be a distinct saving to the rent payer. But the public formed the habit of buying thick books (presumably on the theory that there was more entertainment in them than in thin ones) at a date when apartment house rentals didn't have to be figured, and it has not yet outgrown the habit. Unless the printer of the volume cares to buck the tide of public sentiment and be a martyr in a noble cause, he had better have his novels an inch, or better an inch and a quarter, thick.

The novel is usually printed on paper $30\frac{1}{2} \times 41$ or 41×61 inches which, folded and trimmed all around, yields a book $5 \times 7\frac{3}{8}$. Most novels are of this size, which is the 12mo (pronounced "twelve-mo" and only in old-fashioned circles "duodecimo"). A few are printed on 33×44 (rarely 32×44 which is a printers', not a publishers', size) which gives a book $5\frac{3}{8} \times 8$, trimmed all around, or $5\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{8}$ if trimmed head only, front and tail being left uncut. This size, the octavo, and particularly with uncut leaves is somewhat more elaborate and is usually reserved for books of essays, memoirs, travel, etc.

Types of Paper

Book papers may be roughly divided into those on which type alone or type and line-cuts are to be printed, and those on which halftones are to be printed with the text. In the first group are the antique, laid, MF, and English finish papers, and in the second the English finish, super calendered, and coated. Unless there are cuts of any kind, or it is necessary to have a great many pages without great bulk, antique finish paper always should be used. If this rule were invariably followed one would meet with fewer outlandish products masquerading under the head of books.

Of course there are various grades of antique papers, and there are various grades of basic stock from which the different "finishes" are produced. Without discussing particular brands of paper, it can be stated that in general two grades of basic stock compose all the book papers (excepting, of course, the rag and hand-made), containing a lesser or greater proportion of soda pulp as compared with sulphite. Soda, being pulp from the poplar tree, is softer and spongier than sulphite, which is pulp made from spruce. It follows that the cheaper grade of book paper, in which soda is the preponderant element, is weaker but bulkier than the better grade in which sulphite contributes 50% or better of the finish. Naturally, too, a stock with a large percentage of sulphite is the basis of the higher finished book papers since it would be futile to use a high percentage of soda to obtain bulk and then sacrifice the bulk by finishing.

Bulking Papers

Now it is very important for the printer to distinguish between the two latter grades of book paper, for most novels are printed on one or the other. The preponderantly soda paper is, speaking roughly, much inferior to the sulphite, being loose in texture, slightly gray in hue, uneven, and with considerable fluff on the surface. It is, or should be, used exclusively for the cheap books or for books in the class of the "popular copyright" series of reprints (which sell for 75c. at the present time). The general book publisher should not use this paper on the first edition of any novel that is worth printing at all. If a book is good enough to sell for $1.75 or $2.00, it is surely worth 6c. for paper, assuming that three-fourths of a pound is used. There are books which fail in this respect, altho some would deny vigorously that this is doing anything dishonest. They publish the first edition or two of a novel on the sulphite paper and thereafter switch to the soda, justifying this practice on the ground that it allows them a greater margin for advertising which, in turn, increases the sale of the book, which in turn nets the author increased royalties. I maintain that the purchaser of the fiftieth edition of a book which is fortunate enough to go thru that many printings is entitled to as sound a piece of merchandise as the buyer of the first edition. The fact that with the first edition the composition and other "plant" costs are paid for and charged off, in itself gives a sufficient margin on subsequent editions to provide for additional advertising or anything else that the publisher pleases.

These papers are made from the pulp of wood grown on the North American continent. A valuable paper is the English featherweight, now imported by several houses. This is made in England and Scotland from the esparto grass of southern France and Spain, making a pulp of great bulk combined with high tensile qualities. There is a duty on this paper which brings its price to considerably above that of the domestic varieties but if one takes into account its greater bulking qualities (requiring, therefore, a lighter weight in order to obtain a desired thickness) it is not more costly. This paper, as also the cheaper American paper containing a large proportion of soda, has considerable fluff which has to be guarded against in the pressroom. In fact, unless one does not care at all whether the type, rollers and bed get filled up with particles of paper dust (a constant source of anxiety to the careful printer) the extra speed at which the better papers can be run thru the presses probably compensates considerably for the extra cents per pound that they cost.

Use, therefore, at least the medium grade, preponderantly sulphite paper for $1.75 or $2.00 novels. Where bulk is not of such paramount importance, a finer grade of antique stock with a smoother texture, better color, practically entirely free from fluff in the printing, and costing approximately 2c. more than medium grade, may be used. This better grade paper includes those generally described as "eggshells," in contradistinction to those known as featherweights, high-bulks or bulking-books which constitute the inferior grades. The egg-shell paper is not suited to the average commercial $2.00 novel, however, since the book would have to be of considerable length to get the necessary one-inch-or-better bulk, and the price both on the pound basis and because a heavier paper would be required is more than the $2.00 novel would ordinarily stand. Egg-shell should therefore be used only in books where this increased cost can be offset by the reduction of some other item of manufacture, or where the selling price is not the most important point to be thought of, or out of the popular fiction class, in which competition both as to size and price is stringent. For books of poetry, for instance, or belles-lettres, eggshell is more suitable.

Going on up the scale, we find laid and then water-marked rag papers and, finally, the hand-mades, the aristocracy of the book papers. The term "rag" applied to a paper must be scrutinized closely because so-called "rag" papers differ in quality, depending on their component bases, almost as widely as newsprint does from wood pulp papers, or the latter do from rag papers. Ranging all the way from but small content of the cheapest cotton fibre up to a pure linen body, one can obtain rag papers in an assortment of qualities that will meet the needs of the book in hand.

Special Papers

The ordinary size of rag paper carried in stock is 25 x 38, giving a book approximately 6 x 9½ or 4¾ x 6. Almost any mill making rag papers will, however, manufacture it in the standard book sizes on special order. The sizes of hand-made papers range from approximately 15 x 20 to 22 x 28. A wide and beautiful variety of these can be had in New York, Boston, and Chicago, including the principal Japanese, English, Dutch, French, and Italian papers—some of them made by the same families in the Old World for generation succeeding generation. Reference cannot be made in this article to particular brands, but should anyone have difficulty in securing information with regard to hand-made papers, a letter addressed to the Editor of The Publishers' Weekly will be promptly answered.

I have mentioned laid papers. These can be obtained in the better grade of wood pulps as can, also, papers with a buff or India tint. Such papers should never be used for novels—altho a splendid series of "world's classic" novels is printed on an India laid paper in Suburban French type, with good effect—but India tints and laids as a usual thing, are best reserved for more serious works.

The India tint paper should not be confused with the so-called India or Bible paper which is used for dictionaries, encyclopedias or handy pocket editions of other works. Bible or India papers are coming more and more into fashion for reprints of both standard and modern authors and the enterprising printer and publisher will do well to look into the possibilities of this departure. Sooner or later the change will come from heavy, highly bulking books to lighter, more compact ones and these papers are helping to bring about the revolution.

Guide-posts to Good Printing

I shall finally, indicate some of the other purposes for which book papers should and should not be used:

Works of reference, which are apt to be large and cumbersome, may well be printed on an MF or English finish paper.

Sets of books ordinarily do not require as high bulk as volumes sold individually and therefore either a lighter weight antique or one of the more highly finished papers may be used.

Volumes of poetry usually appear to best advantage on an antique paper with a considerably rough surface, particularly if an old-style type face be employed.

See that the grain runs from head to tail of the book, that is, on the larger dimension. The grain of a 12mo, made from 30½ x 41, for instance, should be the 30½ inch way of the full sheet.

Remember that the end papers or fly-leaves (if you are supplying these as well as the text to the binder) must be of one of the better grades as their toughness is essential.

Don't print books on super paper if they have no halftones or if antique paper cannot possibly be used, and don't print on coated paper if there are halftone illustrations with the text unless a super cannot possibly be used owing to the fineness of the screen. If you must use coated paper anywhere in the book, try to confine it to the illustrations alone, printing the text of the book separately on an antique paper. This is most especially true of textbooks for use in schools and colleges. For some inexplicable reason many school books are printed on super or coated papers, and the resultant glare and damage to the eye-sight of millions of school children has been an obnoxious and unnecessary evil for a great many years. Common sense applied to the textbook business would indicate a more widespread use of English-finish and less of the coated and supers.

I have not gone into the subject of the 16mo or the quarto book because anyone planning a book of either very small or very large size or of unusual shape had best investigate particular examples thoroly before proceeding, unless he is already familiar with them.

The 16mo has possibilities which are generally overlooked except by publishers of those anomalies known as "gift books." There is no reason why small volumes of poetry, essays, or handy reference books shouldn't be made in the small format in the interest of beauty, appropriateness and economy.

Various brands of book papers sold by the different houses differ widely as to bulking qualities, and only roughly average figures are given in this table. They will serve to guide to the general class of paper which should be used for a book of a given number of pages and bulk. The figures indicate number of pages per inch.

Good Book Making in Traveling Exhibits

THE itinerary of the exhibit of "Fifty Books of 1925," as selected for their qualities of good book making by the jury of the American Institute of Graphic Arts, includes thirteen cities outside of New York, and dozens of other requests were received. As with the exhibits of the previous two years, the institutions where the displays are made undertake to give suitable display space, to arrange local publicity, to open the event with a public lecture and to distribute book lists which have detailed descriptions and prices.

The plan has given a great stimulus to the collecting of finely made books, thereby providing concrete support to the publishers who issue books of the highest typographic excellence.

The list of "Fifty Books of 1925" (which is selected from the output of May, 1924 to May, 1925) was printed in the Publishers' Weekly of May 16 or duplicates of the list can be had from the secretary of the American Institute of Graphic Arts at their rooms at 65 East 56th St., New York City.

Books for Collectors

THAT there will be many books in the market this fall suitable for the collector's library and the lover of fine printing is indicated by announcements coming to hand. One of the most valuable in its text as well as beautiful on account of its make-up will be "The Adventures of an Illustrator" by Joseph Pennell, announced by Little, Brown & Co. William Edwin Rudge has been selected as printer, and the book will be a quarto with the type page in twelve-point Garamont. Mr. Pennell has drawn many special illustrations for the book, and the whole make-up has been planned to be in keeping with the text. There will be included, also, portraits of famous authors with whom Pennell has worked, and equally famous artists. The de luxe edition will be limited to advance subscriptions and autographed by Mr. Pennell, and will contain additional illustrations, including two in color and etchings signed by the author.

In taking over the trade business of the Atlantic Monthly Press, Little, Brown & Co. will also have the new book by A. Edward Newton, to be called "The Greatest Book in the World and Other Papers." There will be an edition of 450 copies on large paper, and the trade edition will be in the handsome format planned for Mr. Newton's previous volumes.

Harper's Second Prize Novel

ANNE PARRISH, known to the trade as the author of "A Pocketful of Poses," has been awarded the $2000 novel prize by Harper & Brothers, the contest being the second of this kind. The book is called "The Perennial Bachelor" and is to be published next week. "The Able McLaughlins" was the book that received the first award and it made the fame of the author. Anne Parrish (Mrs. Charles Corliss) has written a story of Delaware, setting the scene in the background of her mother's old home near Wilmington.

The publishers had as judges Stuart P. Sherman, Carl Van Doren and Jesse Lynch Williams, and they accepted five novels for publication from the many manuscripts received from every state in the union.

A Magnificent Piece of Printing

A LIST of the names of 35,000 contributors to the fund which is to provide for the maintenance of Sulgrave Manor, the ancestral home of the Washingtons was the "copy" presented to the Merrymount Press to be made into a book, and, from the uninspiring material, a most beautiful book appears in a limited edition of 48 copies. Presumably one copy is to go to each of the State Societies of Colonial Dames who collected the fund. Under the expert handling of Mr. Updike and Mr. Bianchi even columns of names take on beauty just as the long windows of the stack room at the rear of the New York Public Library makes that facade one of the beauties of the building. The title-page (19 x 12½) give a wonderful opportunity for Merrymount to compose in the grand manner with a fine use of rubrication. The coat-of-arms of the Colonial Dames has been used on title-page and in colophon.

As Books Should Be Bought

ANATOLE FRANCE was the recipient of untold books from enthusiastic admirers and budding authors. Every morning would find his mail cluttered with countless volumes so that he risked being drowned by their accumulation. He succeeded in overcoming this in a characteristic manner. After inspecting his morning's mail he would order the residue to his bath. This bath he was unable to make use of in the ordinary manner. M. Brousson, his one time secretary and author of "Anatole France Himself" quotes him as saying, "So as everything ends by being some use, the bath into which I cannot get, serves to receive the books that are showered on me. When it is full a second-hand bookseller comes and empties it. We have fixed a price. Whoever the authors may be—verse or prose—it is fifty francs a bath. When he came for the first time, at the moment of striking the bargain, I trembled a little. Fifty francs, thought I, truly is not much for carrying off that weighty heap of foolishness. He might have asked a hundred of me. But I was astounded when I saw him draw a note from his pocket; I thought it was I who had to pay him."

Publishers' Association Supplies Further Data to Post Office Commission

THE important brief on postage rates which the National Association of Book Publishers presented before the Congressional Commission and which was outlined in the Publishers' Weekly of August 8th, has been supplemented in the files of the Commission by further data suggested by the questions of the Committee members.

On the question of whether the mails are very largely used for books, the Association pointed out that the greatest use of the mails was made by the smaller booksellers in widely scattered communities, by libraries, schools and colleges in getting their supplies, and by the great mass of general book lovers in exchanging books as gifts. It seemed to be the conclusion of those who investigated that, sooner or later, practically every single volume published may be sent thru the United States mails.

The Committee had also asked about the weights of books, and investigation showed that about 11 per cent of the books issued by the average publisher weighed, without wrapping, less than 8 oz.; 21 per cent, from 8 oz. to 1 lb.; 68 per cent, over 1 lb. Most books of 12mo size carry about 4 oz. of wrapping.

In answer to the question as to whether the books had not been increased in price rapidly enough to cover all extra cost and postage, the Publishers' Association submitted fresh statistics as to the book costs, which show that selling prices have gone up about 55 per cent on the general publications, and the cost of manufacturing over 90 per cent.

Book Week Magazine Pages

THE advance word coming in to the Book Week headquarters from magazine editors is particularly encouraging this year showing not only a continuance of interest but an extension of attention to the subject of children's reading.

The educational magazines are more and more making Book Week a feature thus ensuring an increase of school interest. The Elementary English Review, for example, will have a Book Week play, special reviews and special articles by Franklin Mathiews and Orton Lowe. Primary Education will have an article on reading projects.

Equally significant in the attention being allotted to Book Week in the coming issues of the religious press with every sign of a wider church interest. Sunday School Times, The Congregationalist, The Expositor, Presbyterian Advance, Epworth Herald, the Christian Advocate are all planning Book Week material according to word sent to Miss Humble at the headquarters, 25 West 33rd St.

A New Ben Jonson

THE Oxford University Press announces the early publication of a new and complete edition of the "Works of Ben Jonson." In addition to the plays and poems, it will contain a biography, letters, legal and other documents relating to Jonson's life and affairs, a list of books which his library contained, and introductions to his dramas and other works.

Display Contest Opens

REILLY-LEE'S window display contest $200 in cash prizes opened August 15th with the publication of the new Robert Pinkerton novel "The Fourth Norwood." Photographs of displays may be taken up to October 15th and should be accompanied with a description of the display. The judges are to be F. K. Reilly, L. A. Rogers and F. G. Melcher.

Obituary

MARY CHOLMONDELEY

MARY CHOLMONDELEY, English novelist, died July 15th in Kensington, London. She was the daughter of the late Rev. R. H. Cholmondeley and her grandmother was a sister of Bishop Heber, the hymn writer. Among her novels are "The Danvers Jewels," 1902; "Prisoners," 1906; "Under One Roof," 1918; "The Romance of His Life," 1921.

Communication

Wants Book Tops Stained

Editor, Publishers' Weekly:

August 11, 1925.

Some time ago we wrote you on the subject of stained book tops which communication you were kind enough to publish in the Weekly.

It seems nothing much is being done along this line, and feeling this would aid booksellers in keeping stock in presentable condition, we are taking the liberty to write again on the same subject.

As we understand it, the reason that books in general are no longer top-gilded is to save the expense of manufacturing.

Of course, this is not unreasonable, but if it is practical to stain or paint the tops of ordinary books, thereby making it possible for us to hand out stock that may have been on the shelves for some time, without the dust-pressed-down-by-finger marks in evidence, it will, we believe, be a progressive step in bookselling.

If any publisher or bookseller thinks our suggestion is impractical or unwise or both, we will welcome an open reply pointing out whereby it has no merit.

Author Corrects L. C. Entry

Cambridge, Mass, August 12, 1925.

Editor, Publishers' Weekly:

My attention has been called for the first time to the following entries in a compilation entitled "Dramatic Compositions Copyrighted in the United States 1870-1916," issued by the Library of Congress Copyright Office.

p. 2349. Too Clever by Half by C. A. Pellanus (pseud of William Stone Booth.)

p. 698. First (The) Day of the Holidays by C. A. Pennanus (pseud of W. S. Booth.)

p. 1626. New (A) Start by C. A. Pellanus (pseud of W. S. Booth.)

Each of the above-mentioned ascriptions, so far as it concerns my name, is an error on the part of the compiler of the volume "Dramatic Compositions Copyrighted in the United States 1870-1916," referred to above. So far as I am aware, the author of the above plays was, or is, named C. A. Pellanus. I am not the author, neither of the plays, nor of the name C. A. Pellanus.

Personal Note

ELIZABETH MADISON, formerly associated with the library department of the Sather Gate Bookshop at Berkeley, Cal., is now a member of the staff of Gelber, Lilienthal, Inc., of 336 Sutter Street, San Francisco, in charge of the library sales.

Periodical Note

THE editorial offices of Time, the weekly news magazine, are now moving to Cleveland, but the literary, education and science departments will still continue at 236 East 39th Street, where copies of new books should be sent.

The Saturday Review of Literature, which is the business partner of Time, will still be published from the 39th Street offices without change.

Business Notes

LAWRENCE, KANSAS.—The Lawrence Book Nook at 1021½ Mass. St. will be opened about September 1st by Franklin H. Watts and Henry B. McCurdy.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—A contract has just been let for the construction of a Spanish store building at 3574 University Avenue for the University Book Store. The building will occupy approximately 10,000 square feet and will be of stucco on brick finish.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Mrs. Dickens' Book Shop moves the first of September from 190 Madison Ave. to the Peabody Hotel.

NEW YORK CITY.—On September 1, 1924, the mail order book business conducted under the name of "Standard Book Co." formally located at 118 E. 25th St., and for the past year at 235 W. 23rd St., New York City, was sold to Chas. W. Clark Co., 235 West 23rd St., New York City, who will continue the business under the same name and along the same lines as heretofore.

NEW YORK CITY.—The S. & S. Book and Stationery Co. at Featherbed Lane and Jessup Ave. is to open September 1. Address before that date I. Semiat, 2321 Tiebout Ave., Bronx.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.—Mildred L. Tingley will open a bookshop September 1st. Address before then 212 Highland Ave., S. Attleboro, Mass.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Stan V. Henkels & Son, formerly at 1304 Walnut Street, have moved to new quarters at 1110-1116 Sansom Street (Portuondo Bldg.) second floor. Here they have a more spacious gallery for the display of books, autographs, etc., which they have been selling at auction for the last 55 years.

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—John P. Smith, newsdealer at 210 Kimber Ave., interested in books.

WORCESTER, MASS.—The Bancroft Bookshop, Inc., will open soon in charge of Harriet C. Marble of 1 Clement Street.

The Weekly Record of New Publications

THIS list aims to be a complete and accurate record of American book publications. Pamphlets will be included only if of special value. Publishers should send copies of all books promptly for annotation and entry, and the receipt of advance copies insures record simultaneous with publication. The annotations are descriptive, not critical; intended to place not to judge the books. Pamphlet material and books of lesser trade interest are listed in smaller type.

The entry is transcribed from title page when the book is sent for record. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. When not specified the binding is cloth.

Imprint date [or best available date, preferably copyright date, in bracket] is always stated, except when imprint date and copyright date agree and are of the current year, in which case only "c" is used. No ascertainable date is designated thus; [n. d.].

Sizes are indicated as follows: F (folio: over 30 centimeters high); Q (4to: under 30 cm.); O (8vo: 25 cm.); D (12mo: 20 cm.); S (16mo: 17½ cm.); T (24mo: 15 cm.); sq., obl., nar., designate square, oblong, narrow.

Old and Rare Books

Edited by Frederick M. Hopkins.

A COPY of Surtees' "Jorrock's Jaunts and Jollities," 1843, first edition, Sir Robert Peel's own copy with his autograph on a fly leaf, recently brought £98 at Sotheby's in London.

A FAIR clean copy of the first edition of Boswell's "Life of Samuel Johnson," 1791-1793, two volumes in contemporary half calf, sold for £60 at Hodgson's a few weeks ago. The price of this great biography has been rapidly advancing in the last three or four years.

THE current catalog of Maggs Brothers of London is devoted to "Judaica and Hebraica: manuscripts, printed books, autographs, illustrative of the history, martyrdom and literature of the Jews." As usual it is illustrated and well printed. It contains 245 items, all rare and some unique and of extraordinary historical interest.

THE entire collection of several thousand sporting and dramatic prints, photographs, prompt books, and manuscripts, comprising the famous collection of Browne's Chop House, including such items as manuscripts of Maggie Mitchell, prompt books of William J. Florence, and autographed photographs of the famous stars of the American stage for seventy-five years, has just been bought by M. B. C. Hart, bookseller of 225 West 112th Street.

D ODD, MEAD & CO., will publish several important limited editions this Fall which will interest a wide circle of book lovers and collectors. They will include "Glorious Apollo" by E. Barrington, printed on Old Stratford paper and limited to 350 copies; "On the Roof of the Rockies" by Lewis R. Freeman, profusely illustrated, special de luxe limited edition; "Uncollected Works of Aubrey Beardsley" with an introduction by C. Lewis Hind, de luxe edition with six extra plates, limited to 20 copies for America; and "Contemporary Scale Models of Vessels of the 17th Century" by Henry B. Culver, with 57 illustrations in photogravure, limited to 1,000 copies.

A QUAIN volume, yellowed with age and of great rarity, giving impressions of New England as it was 300 years ago, in the early days of the Pilgrims, has been discovered in the library of the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, Mass. The volume, which carries the title of "New England Rarities Discovered," was printed in 1672, and was written by John Josselyn of Kent, England, one of the earliest arrivals in New England. The old volume bears the imprint of the Green Dragon, in St. Paul's Churchyard, London. In it the author, as the title has it, tells of the "birds, beasts, fishes, serpents, and plants of that country, together with the physical and chirurgical remedies which the natives constantly use to cure their distempers, wounds and sores." Josselyn, a son of Sir Thomas Josselyn, an aristocrat of Kent, visited New England in 1630, staying with his brother a year in Boston. It was during this visit and a subsequent one thirty years later that he obtained the material for his book.

PROFESSOR THEODORE T. JONES, director of the Gould Memorial Library at New York University, has just returned from Europe where he has been making purchases for his library. They include a large number of valuable books of French history from the collection of the Societe de l'Histoire de France. In London he bought more than 500 volumes of the calendars of the State Papers of England which will complete the smaller collection already at the school. Several other important collections were also purchased. All of the books are expected to be in the New York University Library before the Fall term begins.

IT is always a matter of world wide interest when a copy of the Gutenberg Bible comes into the market. Edward Goldston, a London rare book dealer, tells how he became the owner of the first printed book in a letter from which we take the following account: "On the 6th of July I first heard that a Gutenberg Bible was in the market and expected to see it in Cologne. The next morning I left London, and on arriving at Cologne I was surprised to learn that it was a day's journey away. I went to Vienna and there learned it was at the Melk Monastery. A few hours later I inspected the book. The price was fixed and I left for London the same day. After making arrangements for the cash I returned and carried back the two volumes of the Gutenberg Bible to London. The whole transaction took less than two weeks. The copy belonged to the famous Melk Monastery, about 40 miles from Vienna, and is fully described in Schwenke's supplementary volume to the "Gutenberg 42 Line Bibles" published by Insel Verlag of Leipzig. Difficulties developed on account of the authorities in Vienna not wishing to let the copy leave the country as it was a better copy than the one in the Vienna National Library, which I compared page for page. I succeeded, however, in carrying the precious book back to London with me."

"MEREDITHIANA, Being a Supplement to the Bibliography of Meredith, by Buxton Forman," is the latest publication of the Bibliographical Society of London. It is a square octavo volume bound in boards and contains 315 pages. It contains selections of the poetical and prose works; reviews; critical and biographical notices and references in periodicals, together with additions to Part I of the bibliography, Part II (prose and verse) Meredithiana and notes. The chief interest for collectors lies in the additions to the bibliography, which includes the "Letters of George Meredith to Alice Meynell," published by the Nonesuch Press, 1923, and "Letters from George Meredith to Various Correspondents, Pretoria: Printed for private circulation," 1924.

REMAINDERS

THE Syndicate Trading Company buys entire remainders, large and small, of editions of saleable books. Syndicate Trading Co., Book Department, 2 Walker St., New York. Telephone, Walker 9287.

Satisfaction in Bookmaking is the result of—

1. Experience

We have operated under a single management for 32 years. Most of our department heads and many other employees have been with us that entire time, besides having previous experience elsewhere.

2. Plant capacity

Production, 50,000 books per day. We have the largest plant capacity for complete manufacture in the metropolitan district. Equipped to handle the largest runs or the finest small editions. A flexible plant, with a record for speedy output.

3. Convenience

Located in the heart of the publishing and shipping centers, just a stone's throw from the big New York book stores and jobbers. Railroads, steamship lines and motor highways concentrate at this point.

4. Desire to serve

Probably no other book manufactory has an equal reputation for cooperation with its customers. Our customers are our friends. They know—when they need us, they can depend upon us. We are continually carrying on research and experimental work in order to produce better and cheaper books the result of which is participated in by our customers.

Why not let us estimate on your next large or small edition?

Current Prices of Rare Books

EVERY dealer in old and rare books requires at least two reference tools for constant use. In order to fix a fair current price on any unusual item it is necessary to find a record of what that item sold for in the latest auction records.

He needs, therefore, the "American Book Prices Current" as well as the English "Book Auction Records." The two simply supplement each other without duplication. The former records prices paid under the hammer in the New York sales-rooms, while the latter gives him a similar record of sales in London and other book centers of England.

"Book Auction Records" covering the season of 1923-1924, published by Henry Stevens, Sons & Stiles, is sold on this side by the R. R. Bowker Co. It contains over seven hundred and fifty pages and gives the prices of more than eighteen thousand items.

If you have the American record you can double your reference equipment by ordering the British as well.

Price $10 net.

THE VENETIAN GLASS NEPHEW

By Elinor Wylie

REFRESHINGLY different, exquisitely wrought, is this tale of love and witchcraft in the tapestried, green-lagooned Venice of 1782. Many will find in it a magic and a profound significance that will remind them of Walter de la Mare's Memoirs of a Midget. And all who read it will marvel at Mrs. Wylie's creative genius.

Limited edition, 250 copies, net $5.00. Regular edition, net $2.00.

CORAL: A Sequel to "Carnival"

By Compton Mackenzie

IN "Carnival" there were two who passionately loved and parted. In "Coral" there are two—strangely enough the children of those other two—who love and do not part. Carol, a daughter of her times, loves and marries without counting the cost, even though the man is far below her socially. How his rigid pride almost wrecks their happiness, and how her complete generosity saves the day, makes one of the most moving of modern romances. Net $2.00.
